Version	Revision
A version refers to the most current saved file, which may be because of auto save within a software application, such as a word processing software, or because of an upload into a document management repository. A version does not necessarily indicate an official revision. There may be many versions saved before a file is ready to be released under a new revision.	A revision is an official change to a document, drawing, or data file. Each revision may require many versions before it is complete for its intended purpose.
